

Chris SCAFFIDI

Project Director • Facilitator

Chris Scaffidi joined The Pacific Institute after a 15-year career as a professional educator and designer of education curricula. A master communicator with adults and youth alike, Chris' insightful, personal approach enables clients to understand the relevance of The Pacific Institute's concepts to their own lives, both personal and professional.

Complementing his work with the Institute, Chris' own educational background includes a bachelor's degree in psychology from UCLA. He followed this up with a Masters Degree from Gordon Conwell Theological Seminary. His graduate studies focused on the relationships between History, Sociology, Theology and Psychology.

Whether working within educational institutions, large or small private businesses, or social service agencies, Chris is an able partner and advisor to those organizations seeking the route to quality, high performance and excellence.

Chris' authentic enthusiasm and thorough knowledge of The Pacific Institute's curricula allow him to go the extra mile, helping individuals achieve their personal and professional objectives, as they apply the course material to their specific needs. It is this passion to assist individuals in developing their full potential that is Chris' true gift.
